You are expected to have practical experience of working in public or charitable institutions, the ability to confidently teach the basics of business management in the context of public administration, and a focus on the areas of public management and public-sector accounting.

We expect you to conduct your own independent and preferably relevant research. Relevant teaching experience and teaching skills in higher education are desirable.

The acquisition of skills for public administration is at the heart of the courses of study relevant to this post. Within the scope of the post to be filled, we expect you to collaborate with HAW Hamburg's co-operation partners, to be willing to collaborate with all other disciplines represented in the programmes of study mentioned, and to be willing to participate in academic administration.

A willingness to get involved in developing and delivering professional development courses in the university is expressly welcomed.

In addition, we expect you to teach in English, to provide electronic teaching materials, to use teaching and learning systems (Moodle tools), to apply interactive teaching methods using videoconferencing and other tools so as to implement digital teaching and blended-learning approaches.

We also expect a reflected approach to teaching and assessment in the context of generative AI.
